It has come to my attention that a former acquaintance and “employer” has made some allegations about me, and I’m here to clear up some things. As I don’t want to indirectly incentivise harassment, we’ll refer to them as simply “Blue” when appropriate.

I was not going to acknowledge this, but since people who I care about are being dragged into this situation, I felt it best to make a statement.

First of all, I want to once again apologize to them for what I said in confidence in the past. The joke I told was immature, appalling, and not a reflection of who I am today. It was conjured up out of spite and anger for someone who had mistreated myself, and many close friends, in the past, and was meant only as a “locker room” joke for those who were also upset and burned by “Blue.” It was inexcusable, and I am sorry.

Content warning: This next paragraph is inappropriate.

The tasteless joke goes like this: “I was in a hotel bathroom, sitting on the toilet, pleasuring myself. When in the middle of ejaculating, I lost balance and fell, landing face first on a pair of underwear, which belonged to ‘Blue.’” This joke is not based in reality, it never actually occurred, and “Blue” was told this when they asked about its validity.

Although the intention of the joke was to make it more at my expense instead of theirs, it hurt and disgusted them when told to them long after I had stopped telling this joke many years ago. How it affected them is more important, not my intentions.

I had not been working for “Blue” when this poor excuse for a joke was created, nor was I telling it well into my employment with other individuals. So for them to be accosted at all is not right, this is a matter between “Blue” and myself, and should remain this way – I have received reprimands and re-training accordingly by my employers. I do not want to have the people who gave me employment, long after I have grown past this stage in my life, to be facing ire for my own personal actions, and insist that I release my statement on my own, instead of dragging them further into my actions. This is my fault, not theirs, and if anything, I ask them both for forgiveness for bringing them and my co-workers from both companies into this situation.

I haven’t spoken to “Blue” in years, and I am not currently speaking to them now. But when they messaged me on Discord asking to talk about the joke that had been told to them years after I had stopped telling it (roughly eight years I believe), I was shocked to hear it repeated back to me from them, and profusely apologized.

Rightfully, they were upset. But “Blue” had told me that they wished to discuss the matter in a private call, to which I agreed. This call, where I took full responsibility for my past behavior and expressed my sincere regret, was recorded without my consent. The only silver lining of this recording existing is you can hear my apology and our agreement to not contact each other after the fact, which I have upheld to this day and have no intention of breaking now or ever.

As I believe screenshotting private conversations and recording calls without consent to be gross, I can’t provide any receipts, so I can not present my side of the events. But the recording is out there, you can listen for yourself and make your own conclusions.

I do not condone what I did back then, nor do I expect to change any minds, but I want to simply fill in some holes that were left out of the story.

Thank you for reading, and please be respectful.